

Edmund Morrissey
President

Ed is a 1967 graduate of Marquette High School in Alton, Illinois and a 1971 graduate of the University of Miami School of Business in finance.

Ed joined Morrissey Corporation to work in the development of public and private multi-family construction, including Loretto Towers Condominium located in the historic Christian Hill District in Alton, Illinois, where he and his wife, Patty, still reside.

Ed played a leading role in the successful development of many affordable housing programs from 1975 to 1985, including the Turnkey and Section 8 assisted housing programs, including the first Section 8 in the US sponsored by an agency of a PHA with private tax exempt bond financing.

Since becoming president in 1997, Ed has continued leading the company's activities in all phases of the construction industry, including affordable housing, retail, commercial and educational.

Morrissey Construction re-entered the tax credit housing field in 1998, successfully completing many outstanding new-construction and renovation developments. Ed holds numerous construction and safety certifications and continues to be active in many local, state and national community and construction organizations.
